

General George A. Custer Village

General George Armstrong Custer (1839 – 1876) thought he had to subdue the Sioux and Cheyenne and take their country, just as other U.S. generals and their President now think they have to subdue the population of Iraq and take their country.

Together with his soldiers, General Custer met his entirely avoidable fate at Little Big Horn at the hands of Sitting Bull. May the inhabitants of General George A. Custer Village take wiser decisions than their name-giver and abstain from trying to subdue foreign populations and to occupy their lands!
